KIEV WAS ENGULFED IN FLAMES AS REDS ENTERED THE CITY

By M. S. HANDLER Moscow, Nov. 8.—(UP)—All Kiev, the mother of Russian cities, appeared engulfed in a sea of fire as Russian soldiers stood on surrounding heights waiting impatiently to swarm down the hill to attack.

Tears stung their eyes and anger burned in their hearts. The German demolition squads were doing their work well.

Then came the signal and the assault was on. Never before in history, the army organ Red Star said, had a fortified city been liberated so quickly. Driven to a fury by the German destruction of their ancient capital, the Soviets sent their tanks rolling over German gun positions in the outer defenses, pushed through the northwestern outskirts and broke into Kiev at dawn Saturday.

A guards' regiment commanded by a lieutenant colonel was the first to penetrate the city. It cut straight through to the central square and drove on out through the southern outskirts in pursuit of the fleeing Germans.

More and more tanks followed the vanguard, speeding through streets illuminated by the rising sun and sheets of flames from burning buildings.

They passed briefly in Kreschatik street. A Lieutenant Sneludenko, first Russian tank driver to enter Kiev, was being buried there while Kiev girls stood about the grave with flowers in their hands. He was killed in fighting inside the city.

Then the tanks rolled on, passing the great new defense commissariat building, one mass of flames; between the fire-scared, blasted buildings along Kreschatik street, Kiev's Fifth avenue, and by the ruins of the city's administrative buildings, apartment houses, stores, offices and dwellings.

Walls were collapsing around the fire fighters, who were handicapped by the destruction of Kiev's water system. Long tongues of flame shot half way across some streets. Civilians and soldiers alike battled the fires.

The most important parts of the city were little more than blackened walls and heaps of rubble. The Germans destroyed the university, the electric plant, bakeries and schools. Only the opera house and the principal government building appeared miraculously to have escaped.

Few civilians remained in the center of Kiev. The German fire commands had entered each apartment before the final battle and ordered the inhabitants out, poured gasoline about and applied the torch.

As late as last Thursday, the Germans drove civilians to the Kiev railroad station, packed them in freight cars and sent them to the west for slave labor.

Front dispatches told how a man who identified himself as the only Jew left in Kiev took the Russian command to a cemetery where he said the Germans had machine-gunned the Jewish population in 1941. Estimates placed the number of Jews killed at upwards of 40,000.
