These properties are illustrated by the examples in (1) to (6).

(1) How warm it is in the sun's rays, because this is a very unusual occurrence.

(2) How warm it is in the sun's rays, because this is a very unusual occurrence.

(3) How warm it is in the sun's rays, because this is a very unusual occurrence.

(4) How warm it is in the sun's rays, because this is a very unusual occurrence.

(5) How warm it is in the sun's rays, because this is a very unusual occurrence.

(6) How warm it is in the sun's rays, because this is a very unusual occurrence.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.

In the classical grammar, a rule of inversion is described in various other languages that have been analyzed.
Change my voice.

Consider the following examples of inversion of sentences:

1. I was seen by her.
   - 1 was her-seen.

2. They won.
   - They were won by.

3. He is the president of the company.
   - The company is his.

4. They are not interested in the game.
   - The game is not interesting to them.

These properties are illustrated by the following examples:

5. He is a victim of cancer.
   - Cancer is a victim of him.

6. She is a citizen of France.
   - France is a citizen of her.

The following word pairs illustrate the concept of inversion:

1. Love - beloved
2. Read - reader
3. Write - writer
4. See - seer
5. Hear - hearer
6. Make - maker
7. Become - become

These examples show that the direct object of a transitive verb is a possessor of the indirect object when the verb is inverted. The indirect object becomes the direct object.

The structure of an inversion sentence is as follows:

Subject + verb + object + prepositional phrase

Example:

She made the cake with love.

Inversion:

Love made the cake for her.