CONFLICT & DISPUTE RESOLUTION

Beginning the Conversation with Purpose

Instructions 📆

When doing the reading for this class, there are the two basic kinds of information you need to understand:

- 1. What are the main points or conclusions that an author accepts with respect to a particular issue?
- 2. What are the reasons, important considerations, and evidence that lead the author to accept that conclusion?

For our purposes, it is information of the second sort that will be our primary concern since our most basic task is to evaluate the reasons and evidence that are offered to support accepting one possible position on an issue, rather than another.

Reading 🗳

Stone, D., Patton, B., & Heen, S. (2010). What's Your Purpose? In Difficult Conversations: How to Discuss What Matters Most (2^{NO} ed., pp. 131–146). New York: Viking Penguin.

Stone, D., Patton, B., & Heen, S. (2010). Getting Started. In

Difficult Conversations: How to Discuss What Matters Most

(2^{NO} ed., pp. 147–162). New York: Viking Penguin.

Optional: Manzoni, J.-F. (2002, September). A Better Way to Deliver Bad News. Harvard Business Review, 80(9), 114–9, 126.

Questions [°]

- 1. Why it is so important to have a purpose in deciding whether or not to engage in negotiation or conflict resolution?
- 2. In coming up with your purpose, Stone et al. provide three questions to ask yourself. What are these questions, and how does each help you identify a purpose for deciding whether or not to engage in conflict resolution?
- 3. Stone et al. do suggest that there are three purposes that do make sense for conflict resolution. What are these?
- 4. Why do Stone et al. believe we tend to start out these conversations in the wrong way? What two steps do they give for starting off in the right direction?

One specific kind of conversation Stone et al. talk about is delivering bad news. Such conversations are especially difficult because they may trigger an identity quake within you—after all, we often do not feel like a good person when firing someone or giving them negative feedback. Similarly, bad news is likely to trigger a quake within the recipient as well. The optional reading by Manzoni provides concrete advice for such situations (and it should seem pretty similar to the material we have already covered in this course).

To answer these questions you will have to reflect critically on what you have read and possibly re-read important passages.

Although I strongly suggest that you write out brief answers to these questions, you do not have to turn in written responses. You do, however, need to be prepared to speak intelligently about these issues at our next class meeting.